Roberto Clemente was the first great Hispanic star in major league baseball. Playing for the Pittsburgh Pirates, Clemente was one of the best baseball players of his time. He died in a plane crash on December 31, 1972, while on a humanitarian trip to Nicaragua. Clemente's activism changed American views of Latinos in baseball and beyond. He was elected to the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1973. Clemente was a three-time National League MVP and a 12-time All-Star. He holds the record for the most extra base hits in a single World Series game (6). Clemente's number 21 was retired by the Pittsburgh Pirates, and he was posthumously awarded the Roberto Clemente Award in 1973, which is presented annually to a player who best exemplifies the character and community involvement of Roberto Clemente.

Roberto Clemente was born on August 18, 1934, in Barrio San Antón, Puerto Rico. He played for the Pittsburgh Pirates from 1955 to 1972, during which time he became one of the most beloved players in Major League Baseball. Clemente was a five-time National League batting champion, a 12-time All-Star, and a three-time National League Most Valuable Player. He was also known for his humanitarian work, particularly in Nicaragua, where he died in a plane crash in 1972.

Roberto Clemente's career was marked by his exceptional skills on the field and his dedication to helping others. He was posthumously inducted into the Baseball Hall of Fame in 1973, and his legacy continues to inspire generations of baseball players and fans alike.
