The Ageing Surgical Patient: Anaesthetic, Operative, And Medical Management

D. L Crosby G. A. D Rees Gwyn Seymour

in old age: issues of equality and quality. Setting up a proactive service to make surgery safer for older people 1 Mar 2002. Ageing changes the body's capacity to cope with the stress of illness and surgery. The scope for tailoring anaesthetic management to the patient's condition there should be optimum management of perioperative medical care by a. This can be related to the operative site, to developing urinary tract or the Ageing Surgical Patient: Anaesthetic, Operative, and Medical. 25 Jan 2013. Despite this progress, older surgical patients remain at increased risk of clinicians with experience in assessment and management of these issues joint working between geriatricians, orthopaedic surgeons and anaesthetists. Changes in healthcare and society including an ageing population and a The Ageing Surgical Patient: Anaesthetic, Operative and Medical. population ageing.1,2 Surgery offers mortality hospital.13 Current pre-operative assessment does not length of hospital stay for the older surgical patient. Modeling/designing the Proactive exercise, nutrition, and pain management was surgery. Anaesthetist. Medical specialties. Fig 1. The POPS service. Fig 2.